Teaching and supervision experience

Since 1994, I have been teaching courses on all levels on: (Introduction to) International Politics (undergrad), Foreign Policy Analysis (MA), Theories of International Relations (MA and PhD), Theories of International Political Economy (MA), Security Studies (MA), Theorising International Relations (MA), The end of the (post) Cold War (MA), Comparative European Politics (undergrad), West European Politics: the case of Italy (MA), Research design in comparative politics and international relations (PhD), Social theories of power in international relations (MA).

I have also been teaching PhD workshops at different universities or research centers: Al Ahram Center for Political and Strategic Studies (Cairo), Antwerp, IEP Bordeaux, University of Coimbra, Hebrew University (Jerusalem), Universities of Madrid, Tartu, Tampere, Tübingen, and within the Danish PolForsk network.

Besides my university teaching activities, I have been teaching at (and co-organising) several Summer universities in Kraków (1991-93), an on-line seminar on “Critical approaches to (In)security in Europe”, organised by the Standing Group of IR of the ECPR, a module within the framework of a preparation course for Italian diplomats in Florence, a module during the SGIR PhD Summer School in Prague (EIRSS 2006), and the NUPI Master Class 2010 on power analysis in IR.

In Budapest and Uppsala, I have been supervising well over 150 BA and MA theses.

Moreover, I have been the supervisor of two MPhil theses:

Dorina Nastase (Central European University, 1999-2000): “The geopolitical tradition in French IR theory” (MPhil in Political Science)

Dusanka Anastasijevic (Central European University, 1997-98): “Isolation less splendid: FR Yugoslavia, Croatia, Slovakia and Belarus at the contemporary European border of order” (MPhil in Political Science)

Experience of team leadership and project management

2003-2009

Leader of an international project on "Self-fulfilling geopolitics? An analysis of geopolitical thought in, and its consequences for, post Cold-War Europe" (Collaborators: Alexander Astrov, Central European University, Budapest and Tartu University; Andreas Behnke, University of Reading; Pinar Bilgin, Bilkent University; Petr Drulák, Institute of International Studies, Prague; Merje Kuus, University of British Columbia, Canada; Elisabetta Brighi, Oxford University and Fabio Petito, University of Sussex and L'Orientale di Napoli; Serban Cioculescu, University of Bucharest). Financially supported by the European COST A24. Book forthcoming with Cambridge University Press.

2000-2001, 2003-2005

Leader (with Anna Leander) of a research project on Alexander Wendt's constructivist theory in international relations, funded by a CEU research grant and a COPRI travel/workshop grant. The research was published in a special issue of the Journal of International Relations and Development in 2001 and became the core of the reference book on Alexander Wendt and his critics, which we edited for Routledge (2006).

1997-99,

Head of International Relations and European Studies Department at the Central

European University, Budapest. As such, I was responsible for the entire administrative and academic organisation of the department, including budget, curriculum and faculty development. During my headship, the programme was financially saved, got a new MA curriculum-structure, developed a new PhD curriculum (both are still in place), and was upgraded from a “programme” to an independent “department”. The external assessment of my department headship by the Open University was very positive over these years (external examiners were: Prof. John Baylis, now University of Wales, Swansea, Tel: +44(0)1792 295302/3, e-mail: j.baylis@swansea.ac.uk; and Prof. Michael L. Smith, Queens University, Belfast, Tel: +44 28 9033 5544, Email: m.smith@qub.ac.uk).

During my years at the CEU, I was responsible for organising several Curriculum Development sessions in Budapest. Moreover, I was the local contact person in a project on curriculum development funded by the Volkswagen-Stiftung (1997-2000) and led by Prof. Klaus Segbers (Berlin) which materialised in the publication of a textbook for International Relations. Finally, I was invited to a special curriculum development workshop in Vilnius (March 2000) and as a special rapporteur of the Council of Europe Working Party on “Social Sciences and the Challenges of Transition” (1998).
