

Gabriel Malima

Gabriel Malima is currently a PhD candidate at the University of Dar es Salaam. He works as a researcher and an assistant lecturer of the School of Business Studies and Humanities at the Nelson Mandela – African Institution of Science and Technology. With a multi-disciplinary academic background in agriculture, business and development, he has offered research and consultancy services to various local and international organizations operating in Tanzania and Kenya. Gabriel's research interests include innovation development, adoption of renewable energy technologies, climate change mitigations and energy political economy. His current research work seeks to understand and address the extent to which technological capabilities play in the prioritization of renewable energy technologies in developing countries.

LinkedIn: www.linkedin.com/in/gabriel-malima-a8971218